How to Exit Your Business & Accomplish Your Goals

Ned Conley, CPA, CVA, CEPA

EG Conley PC

Ned will discuss how you define a “successful” exit and the timing required to do so. He will explore the importance of having congruent personal, business, and financial goals and the role each plays in designing the exit plan. Various transfer motives, channels, and methods will be brought to life through the sharing of real life cases Ned has been a part of. Ned will also talk about Business Valuation and its role in the process.

What is one of the most influential factors affecting your company's success? It's your employees—the people who are right beside you, helping to build the profit and pursue opportunities for growth. Physical assets—the buildings and equipment—support financial goals, but to carry out the directives necessary to reach those goals, a company won't get too far without trusted employees.

And, if you're like other business owners, you have certain employees whose departure from the company could create genuine setbacks. They're the ones with the management skills, technical know-how, experience, and customer relationships you rely on. How would your company handle the void left by a key employee's departure or death, and the urgent need to find a qualified replacement?

Are any of your key people close to retirement, or absent due to a long-term illness or disability that may prevent their return? Perhaps one of your star performers recently quit. Or, perhaps, one of your key employees passed away not long ago. With the anxiety of losing a valuable employee still fresh in your mind, it's a perfect time to start putting a plan in place to protect your company in the event another key person leaves.

Determine who your key employees are.

They are the employees you could describe as the people you can't do without—the ones you trust to make the right decisions when you're not available. They can be at any level or in any position. And there currently may be no one who could step right in and take over their responsibilities. Remember, you're a key person too! While it can be uncomfortable to think about one's own mortality, concentrate on those left behind and what they could go through if you haven't planned for your company's future.

Decide how to protect your company after losing a key employee.

It's an unhappy reality of running a business that good employees leave. And, if an employee has distinctive skills, the loss can be even harder to deal with. That person's unique talents and expertise mean you need to fill some big shoes. Plan to spend a lot of time and effort finding a replacement. And, don't forget money. It's estimated that the cost to replace mid- to high-level employees can range from one-and-a-half to four times their annual salary.

Are you prepared to cover that expense out-of-pocket? Few employers have that kind of extra money lying around, "just in case." Having an important employee leave is enough of a disruption to your business. Do you want to add a financial burden on top of that?

Are you prepared for an evacuation?

In a workplace emergency you should act quickly and effectively.

So:

- Know your workplace's Emergency Action Plan, including how and to whom to report workplace emergencies.
- Know where emergency alarms are located and how to use them.
- Understand how to perform emergency duties you've been assigned.
- Have at least two emergency exit routes—a primary route and an alternate route in case your primary route is blocked by fire or smoke.
- Follow EXIT signs to evacuate safely.
- Move swiftly, but don't run.
- Once outside, move away from the building and its exits so you don't hamper emergency operations.
- Know the location of your muster points - the place you should escape to in the event of an emergency.
- Report to the evacuation warden when you reach the muster point.
- Stay at the muster point until notified by the warden that it is safe to leave.

Also remember these important evacuation safety tips:

- Recognize your limits; don't be a hero.
- Do your job and let others do theirs; everyone has specific jobs for which he or she has been trained.
- Remain calm; help others only if you can do so without endangering yourself.

Three ways to prepare for an emergency

September is National Preparedness Month. Here are three steps recommended by the Department of Homeland Security that you can take to make sure that you're prepared if a disaster strikes.

1. Have a family emergency plan. To develop one, ask yourself these questions: "Do we have everyone's contact numbers as well as an out-of-town contact?" "What is the evacuation route for our neighborhood?" "Is there a designated place for everyone to meet outside of the home and neighborhood?" "What is the emergency plan including the evacuation location of my child's school?" Homeland Security says only you can answer these questions and develop an emergency plan that will suit your family's unique needs. You can download templates at their website to help get you started (www.ready.gov).

2. Create an emergency kit. The kit should include basic items like water, food, battery-powered radio, flashlight, and first-aid supplies. For a complete list of recommended supplies, go to www.ready.gov.

3. Learn more about specific natural disasters, potential terrorist threats, and other catastrophic events. For general information check the Homeland Security website. For specific questions about threats in your area, contact your local Office of Emergency Management or Citizen Corps council.

WHY SAFETY RULES MATTER

Don't be one of the 4 million-plus American workers who are injured on the job every year—or one of the 5,500-plus who are killed. Take safety rules seriously.

DON'T SKIP YOUR LUNCH BREAK

Skipping your lunch break to get more work done might be a mistake. A Canadian government program called "Take Back the Lunch Break!" urges workers to take their break and eat a nutritious meal.

If there's time, you could get out and take a brisk walk, too. The Canadians suggest that more work is not necessarily better work—and it also might not be safer work!

ASK BEFORE YOU ACT

Not sure about a job procedure? Not sure about a safety or health hazard? Not sure about what type of PPE you need to protect yourself on the job? Any time you're not sure about anything related to your job and your safety, ask your supervisor about it before you act.
